The Defendants served by the program are currently being detained in the Jail despite court orders releasing them upon relatively low monetary bonds. The Defendants, their family members, friends, former employees, pastors, teachers and others must be interviewed. Information received must be verified.

This work must be done by individuals trained in motivational interviewing and administering risk assessments, who are very familiar with court procedures. They must also understand the purpose of advocacy, the rules of confidentiality, and the operation of an adversarial court system.
